

Two new drugs lower heart failure risk in diabetes patients

Studies discussed at the European Society of Cardiology (ESC) have shown the positive results of a new class of diabetes medications called SGLT2 inhibitors in reducing the risk of developing heart failure in patients with diabetes and prediabetes.