

New drug shrinks lung cancer tumors in 54% of patients

An experimental Amgen drug that targets a specific genetic mutation has reduced tumor size in around half of advanced lung cancer patients given the highest dose in a small, early-stage trial, the company said.