

Aspirin safe for brain-bleed strokes

Patients who have had a stroke caused by bleeding in the brain can safely take aspirin to cut their risk of future strokes and heart problems, according to a new study. The Lancet research suggests aspirin does not increase the risk of new brain bleeds, and may even lower it.