

FDA warns about dangers of sleeping pills

Certain commonly used sleeping pills will now include a new boxed warning, alerting patients to possible serious or life-threatening behaviors that may result from taking these drugs, the US Food and Drug Administration announced. The move follows several reports of rare but serious injuries and deaths resulting from sleepwalking, sleep-driving and other complex behaviors while sleeping, such as the unsafe use of a stove.