

New drug for Crohn's disease approved

The health ministry has approved a biologic drug that will help end the suffering of more than 200,000 Crohn's disease patients. The drug, launched in the US in 2009, was approved based on the results of three clinical trials.