

Scientists develop new typhoid vaccine

A clinical trial, published in the New England Journal of Medicine, has found that a new typhoid vaccine works extremely well at preventing a strain of the infection that is almost untreatable. More than nine million children are being immunized in Pakistan, where the bacterial infection has been highly resistant to antibacterial drugs.