

New drug halves breast cancer risk

Scientists have found out that a drug called Anastrozole halves the risk of breast cancer in women. The drug blocks estrogen, which fuels most tumors but only works in post-menopausal women.