

New drug treats multiple sclerosis in 20 days

The health ministry has approved a new drug that helps reduce disease activity in patients with relapsing multiple sclerosis. The oral medication is given to patients in two annual courses for a maximum of 20 days over two years, with no treatment needed for years 3 and 4.