

New Research links ACE inhibitors to higher risk of lung cancer.

The use of angiotensin-converting enzyme (ACE) inhibitors to lower blood pressure was associated with a 14% increased overall risk of developing lung cancer, according to a research by scientists of Canada's McGill University.