

Aspirin can reduce risk of colorectal cancer

Thousands of people with a genetic condition called Lynch syndrome (LS) should be given aspirin every day to slash their risk of colorectal cancer. A major study showed people could cut their odds of developing the disease by taking aspirin every day for two years.