

Universal healthcare system: Six types of patients eligible for free services

The Cabinet has announced the criteria for patients who cannot afford the universal healthcare system and who are eligible for free medical services. The government said it will cover the medical expenses for individuals who receive government financial aid, families whose primary earner is unemployed, individuals with disability who are unemployed, individuals living in social care centers, individuals residing in disaster-affected areas, and individuals whose income cannot cover their household's basic needs.