

Google halts glucose-sensing contact lens project

Google and Novartis have stopped working on a project to create contact lenses to measure blood sugar levels in tears due to the lack of consistently accurate results.