

UK scientists develop preventive treatment for migraine

Scientists at King's College London have discovered a new preventive medication for migraines called Erenumab that could significantly reduce the number of episodes patients experience.