Total bolsters its network in Egypt to reach 240 stations nationwide

As part of Total's commitment to cement and continuously expanding its presence in Egypt, Total Egypt inaugurated its service station on the Autostrad Road, the latest addition to Total's growing network of 240 stations in Egypt. The opening ceremony took place in the presence of Jérôme Dechamps, vice president of Mediterranean and Middle East of Total Marketing and Services, and Ian Lepetit, Total Egypt's managing director.

"Egypt is the biggest oil and gas market in Africa and the Middle East and is a key country for us. I am delighted to witness first-hand this new addition to TOTAL network in Egypt," said Jérôme Dechamps. "The demand for energy in Egypt is very high and the local environment encourages growth and development. As the fourth largest oil and gas company worldwide, it is our duty to contribute to the economic growth of countries where we operate by expanding our investments in response to customers' evolving needs and expectations."

"Our growth in Egypt is intertwined with the country's economic development and in such a fast-moving environment the demand for energy swiftly grows. We constantly align our plans to widen access to safe, efficient, and reliable energy in support of Egypt's economic progress," said Ian Lepetit. "Driven by our commitment to energise life, every day, we are focused on expanding our network to new key urban areas and highways to better serve the market, adding 12 new stations every year. We also invest substantially in renovating our service stations, while complying with the highest European standards in building and operating them to ensure we provide our customers with only the best quality products and services."
