

New migraine prevention drug approved

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration has approved Aimovig for the preventive treatment of migraine in adults. The treatment is once-monthly self-injection. Aimovig is the first FDA-approved preventive migraine treatment in a new class of drugs that work by blocking the activity of the calcitonin gene-related peptide, a molecule that is involved in migraine attacks.